"If I could give only two pieces of advice, they would be (1) persistence is the key to achieving your goals as a writer, and (2) everything is grist for the mill."

Deborah Vetter

Ms. Vetter's early career included a stint in the performing arts. After graduation from Knox College with a degree in theater communications, she spent five years in New York City pursuing the acting profession. Between classes, auditions, and performing in workshops and summer theater venues, she held long-term temp assignments at companies such as Time, Inc. (People, Money, and Life magazines), Hearst Publications, and the Girl Scouts of America. Her connection with the performing arts has come full circle as she now serves as office manager for a professional live theater company in her hometown.

Because of her theater background, Ms. Vetter views the editor's role as akin to that of a stage director. Just as a director teases out the best performance from actors in a play, so an editor works with individual authors, helping them to revise and polish their manuscripts until they are the best they can possibly be. Every author has a unique background, a unique perspective to offer, and Ms. Vetter believes an editor's role is to recognize the potential in each submission that crosses her desk.
